What are they?

Biobased products, as defined by section 9002 of the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (FSRIA or the 2002 Farm Bill), are commercial or industrial products (other than food or feed) that are composed in whole, or in significant part, of biological products, renewable agricultural materials (including plant, animal, and marine materials), or forestry materials.

Biobased Products & BioPreferredSM What are they?

BioPreferredSM is the name of the procurement preference program designed to increase the purchase and use of biobased products by Federal agencies. The 2002 Farm Bill charges the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) with managing the BioPreferredSM Program. USDA is proud to be a leader in implementing this important program.

As a manager of this program, USDA has been tasked with the process of designating items (or generic groupings) of biobased products that require BioPreferredSM procurement preference. These designated items contain numerous, commercially available, brand-name products to choose from.

USDA initiates the item designation process by gathering product data to determine biobased content, technical characteristics, public health, and environmental data. This information is reviewed and presented through the Federal Register for public comment before final item designation is made.

Once an item has been designated, any commercially available product that meets the minimum biobased content standards within that grouping becomes eligible for procurement preference by the Federal Government. BioPreferredSM program guidelines require that qualifying biobased products be purchased when they:

- are reasonably available,
- meet performance standards, and
- are reasonably priced.
